Dear Harrod,

I am afraid that with the end of term I failed to thank you for your kind letter about Whitehead. It was very interesting in itself, though of course it cast little light on Wittgenstein. As it happens, Wittgenstein was apparently rather attached to Eric Whitehead who, I suppose, was the son that you knew. The other son, North, who was a contemporary of his at Trinity Wittgenstein did not get with at all.

In the mean time I have heard from King's College Library and it seems quite clear from the correspondence between Keynes and his father that, as you say, payments to Johnson were commenced before the First War. However I am glad to have gone into it as fully as I could.

Thank you again for your help.

Yours sincerely,

Brian Mcawinnen
